A collection of short stories from the original "mixed bag of nuts", that gaggle of O. Henry wannabees: the scribes of The Old Arkham Writer's Asylum. Together for the first time (in one place) in all their disjointed glory. Until now they'd just been sending out query letters, drinking coffee, collecting rejection slips and bemoaning the lack of appreciation of their collective genius. But, like chimps pounding away at their typewriters, they persevered. Putting their twisted thoughts on paper and hoping to find an audience just as quirky as they. Whether you prefer the older style of Nigel Tidwell or the Southern Goth of Breanna Berwood or the barely legible scrawlings of Jeff Spfaff -- from the mirthful to the macabre -- you'll surely find something to amuse you in this neat little tome. Apart from the demented ramblings of their beloved Editor-in-Chief (James R. Dracy) this just might be the most creative anthology to come down the pike in some time.
