The Telemarketing Dialogues: Season Two Mr Matt Selou

I did this initially for fun, with the idea of publishing in the back of my mind. The spelling errors are intentional, especially for the appreciation I have for homophones and entendre. My job telemarketing inspired this. Most of the stories are exaggerated. This will be very hard to understand, but the more you read, the more you will learn about the person and their idiosyncratic behavior, humor, loyalty, and exaggerated truth if you look hard into the line of satire. I have decided not to edit this at all, because I want to present them as they were presented to my fellow co-workers. With the high-turnover rate, it's just not fair, especially since I've lost contact with most of them. I will probably edit and re-release it in the future. The reason I found this to be a topic to talk about is the freedom. Telemarketers are annoying, but there are so many elements which I will explain in the "Pilot" episode, which is more of a microcosm for what is about to come. During work, anytime I had a great idea, or something funny, I would write it down a few words so I would remember it after 9pm when we would bust out of work. I would stay until 4 or 5 in the morning (if I was having a really good time) and elaborate on certain stories. While I'd be writing my script, I would constantly get new ideas, writing up to 15 pages sometimes in a night. Every episode is what I would hand to my co-workers. Season 1 and 2 is divided by my 2nd trip to overseas to Hawaii and Australia. The laughter in writing them was rewarding enough, and then the demand for the scripts from my co-workers was bonus.
