Gay people often discover there are periods when their life becomes a battlefield of emotional conflicts, caused by situations beyond normal everyday control. Homosexual men and women have found ways of addressing life in a different way and are continually seeking new ways of dealing with it. Life for many gay people is one that is overwhelmed with emotional problems, awash with fragile and delicate feelings, not to mention the host of other emotions that encompass every aspect of the Gay psyche. It is not easy asking people to address memories they might prefer to keep buried, and in a number of cases, there were moments which brought about an outpouring of heartrending and excruciating tears. You will find that every story is different, each person tells of the raw pain they suffered, their happiness and joy, their hopes and dreams, that often I found myself challenged to maintain a dry eye. The events described within this book speak for themselves
